DIABETES

Diabetes has become a serious public health problem in the U.S. Approximately 193,000 deaths occur from diabetes each year making it the seventh leading cause of death among Americans. Currently, an estimated 16 million Americans have diabetes with 1700 new cases being diagnosed each day. Those with diabetes are at an increased risk for blindness, end-stage renal disease, lower extremity amputations and cardiovascular disease. Consequently diabetes accounts for $92 billion in medical costs and lost productivity each year.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention have begun a five year research program designed to evaluate and improve the health care and health status of people with diabetes. It involves six research centers located in California, Hawaii, Indiana, Michigan, New Jersey, and Texas along with a Coordinating Center that will work together to assess current diabetes treatments, develop new interventions, and measure how well they work. It is the largest program of its kind ever undertaken to study diabetes.

CHILDHOOD OBESITY

Obesity is the most prevalent nutritional disease of children in the United States with an estimated 25-30% of American children affected. The literature indicates that the prevalence of obesity and the co-morbidities associated with obesity emphasize the urgency with which effective treatment and prevention must be developed and implemented. Childhood obesity perpetuates health risks that carry into adulthood. While childhood problems associated with being overweight are complex and individually determined; genetics, lifestyle, emotional factors, and the environment have been identified as factors contributing to childhood obesity. Research indicates that a basic weight loss program consisting of diet therapy, physical activity, behavior modification and family involvement are effective treatment options. Increasing the amount of physical exercise has been shown to be the best predictor of long-term success in weight management. Recent data on childhood obesity has been published by NCHS in Health, United States.

DRUGS IN THE WORKPLACE

Employees who abuse alcohol and/or illegal drugs while at work often exhibit poor job performance and have difficulty keeping their jobs. The literature indicates that drug and alcohol abuse costs the economy $246 billion in health care expenditures, premature death, impaired productivity, automobile accidents, crime, and welfare. The combination of the tight labor market and more workplace programs to treat drug and alcohol abuse has resulted in greater numbers of employers treating rather than firing those with substance abuse problems. Research indicates that when employee assistance programs are available for employees who abuse drugs or alcohol, only 1.5% of the workers turn to it for help with their addictions. The Center for Substance Abuse Treatment, SAMHSA is releasing new public service announcements directed at combating drug abuse in the workplace.

HOSPITALISTS

Hospitalists are hospital-based physicians who assume the care of hospitalized patients of primary care physicians with the intent of handing the care back to the primary care physician at the conclusion of hospitalization. Currently, there are at least 3000 hospitalists in active practice in the United States. The literature indicates that the use of hospitalists is expanding rapidly. A major force behind this movement is the assumption that inpatient care provided by physicians who practice in the hospital and are available throughout their shifts is less costly, of higher quality, and less variable than the care provided by primary care physicians who see patients briefly once a day. Research indicates that implementation of a hospitalist program generally leads to a 10-25% decrease in the length of hospital stay and no measurable change in clinical outcomes such as mortality and readmission. AHCPR has recently funded research on the hospitalist movement occurring in the United States.

RESPONSIBLE FATHERHOOD

Data from the Administration for Children and Families show that the number of fathers taking responsibility for their children by establishing paternity has tripled. The literature indicates that the well-being of children is enhanced by the presence of caring and involved fathers and their absence can have lasting detrimental effects on children's lives. Research suggests that acknowledging paternity is a crucial first step in increasing fathers' involvement in their children's lives and is essential to ensuring children receive the financial and emotional support they need. When children grow up without a father they are more likely to do poorly in school, get in trouble with the law, and have problems obtaining and keeping a job.

SELECTIVE SEROTONIN REUPTAKE INHIBITORS

Selective serotonin reuptake inhibitors (SSRIs) are a class of drugs whose major pharmacological effect is the selective reuptake blockade of serotonin into presynaptic neurons without affecting the reuptake of norepinephrine or dopamine. The literature indicates that SSRIs have established themselves as the first-line of treatment for depression due to their documented efficacy, ease in prescribing and favorable side effect/safety profile. Further, these agents are also commonly used in the treatment of obsessive-compulsive disorder, post-traumatic stress disorder, panic disorder, and bulimia. Research indicates that there are five SSRIs currently available in the United States: fluoxetine (Prozac), paroxetine (Paxil), sertraline (Zoloft), fluvoxamine (Luvox), and newly available citalopram (Celexa). NIMH is currently studying SSRIs in the treatment of major depression.
