YOUTH VIOLENCE

Violent behavior among youth is a serious social problem in the U.S. that has deleterious effects on the current and future lives of those committing the violent acts, on many victims and on private citizens. Despite the recent drops in arrest rates for juvenile violent crimes, the arrest rate for youths remains disproportionately high when compared to other age groups. In addition, the high rate of youth violence will likely continue since the number of youth in the population is expected to increase by more than 20%.

Successful prevention strategies to curb youth violence require a thorough understanding of causation and the ability to identify youth who are in need of intervention. The CDC has created a youth violence prevention team which supports several types of strategies proven to be effective with youth. These include nurse home visitation, parent training programs, mentoring programs and school programs with social-cognitive curricula.

ANABOLIC STEROID ABUSE

"Anabolic steroids" is the familiar name for synthetic substances related to the male sex hormones (androgens). These substances promote the growth of skeletal muscle and the development of male sexual characteristics. The literature indicates that steroid abuse among adolescents is on the rise. In 1991, 1.9% of eighth graders were reported as having used steroids while in 1999, 2.7% were reported to have used steroids. Research indicates that teaching students about the adverse effects of steroid use does not convince adolescents that they personally can be adversely affected. One approach that has been proven to be effective is a multicomponent team-centered approach which not only shows adolescents how nutrition and strength-training can enhance body-image and how adolescents can learn to refuse drugs, but also discusses the adverse effects of steroid use on sports performance. NIDA is sponsoring research to find what programs are effective in lowering steroid use among adolescents.

EDUCATING PROVIDERS OF HIV/AIDS CARE

HIV/AIDS care includes many disciplines which function together to form a continuum of care that cuts across diverse segments of the population. It is vital that providers of this care have access to state-of-the-art information on clinical, pharmaceutical, support systems, and research to better serve their clients. The literature indicates that continuing education and training is a critical way to achieve this. Research indicates that this process allows the exchange of ideas from a wide variety of perspectives so that priorities for change can be established. Further, it has long-term positive effects on comprehensive care, the way care is delivered, and provider attitudes. The AIDS Education and Training Centers (AETCs) program of HRSA supports a national network of regional centers that conduct this type of training to improve the care of people living with the disease.

HYSTERECTOMY

Hysterectomy is the surgical removal of a uterus that is diseased, misplaced or malfunctioning. The literature indicates that hysterectomy is the second most common surgery performed on women in the United States. Abdominal hysterectomy is the most frequent operation performed by gynecologists, although the uterus can also be removed through the vagina. Research indicates that inappropriate recommendations for hysterectomies are due to failure to try alternative treatments before hysterectomy and lack of adequate diagnostic evaluation. The National Center for Health Statistics collects data on hysterectomies in the National Health and Nutritional Examination Survey.

PATIENT EDUCATION MATERIALS FOR PHYSICIAN PRACTICES

Patient education is an important component of health promotion and disease management programs. Responding to the increased demand to provide informed information to consumers, patient education materials are proliferating in print, audiovisual and electronic format and vary by objective, scope, and level of information. The literature indicates that this plethora may lead to an over-abundance of material that would best be handled if physicians themselves selected and personally distributed this information to their patients. Millions of dollars are spent each year on the production and distribution of patient education materials. Research indicates, however, that studies describing their actual use by physicians are scarce. AHRQ recently funded research in which the differing levels of patients' education were found to be a significant factor in how physician practices are profiled in managed care quality indicators.

QUALITY OF LIFE IN THE MENTALLY ILL

Although no single definition of quality of life (QoL) is universally accepted, it is best defined as the individual's own subjective perception of well-being and satisfaction with his or her life. The literature indicates that a growing number of research studies have been undertaken to investigate the QoL in the mentally ill. These studies derive their data from two sources: epidemiological studies which provide a number of indicators from which QoL can be inferred and clinical studies which use specifically designed measuring instruments to obtain QoL data. Research indicates that both the epidemiological and clinical studies clearly show extensive reduction in the QoL associated with mental illness. NIMH is funding research on the impact anxiety disorders have on the QoL.

MAJOR HEALTH CARE POLICIES: FIFTY STATE PROFILES, 1999. National Conference of State Legislatures, Washington D.C., 2000. Ref-Gen WA 33AA1 M28893

This directory provides information on health care policy issues by state for 1999. Each state contains an overview of the major health issues its state legislature addressed during that year. Information contained in each profile is drawn from legislative documents which includes: bills, bill summaries, state reports and other administrative documents. The profiles outline the current status of health policy issues in every state. Each profile contains two parts—a narrative and a summary table. Summary tables include the following categories:

Insurance market reform	Health care facilities
Selected insurance mandates	Children's health insurance programs
Medicaid and indigent care	Managed care
Physician practice	Health work force supply and distribution
Prescriptive authority	Pharmaceuticals
Tobacco settlement

PROFILES OF U. S. HOSPITALS. HCIA, Baltimore, MD, 2000. Ref-Assn WX 22AA1 P943

Profiles of U.S. Hospitals presents comprehensive information available on the financial, operational, and clinical performance of nearly every hospital in the United States. Hospitals included in this directory are listed alphabetically by state and then by city. Indicators in this directory include:

Ownership	Location
Teaching status	Standard & Poor's bond rating
Number of beds	Occupancy rate
Medicare percentage	Medicaid percentage
Operating revenue	Average payment period
