THE WEST NILE VIRUS

The West Nile Virus (WNV), first detected in Uganda in 1937, is a virus that may cause encephalitis or inflammation of the brain. The virus is transmitted by mosquitoes that bite infected birds. The mosquitoes then pass the virus to humans. Generally the infection leads to mild flu-like symptoms which include fever, headache, joint stiffness, and rash. Those with severe reactions may suffer convulsions, paralysis, brain damage, and death. The first WNV outbreak in the U.S. occurred in the New York City area during the summer of 1999. Nearly 2000 people were infected with the virus but only 62 people became ill with encephalitis and 7 died.

The appearance of the WNV in the U.S. raised the issue of preparedness of public health agencies to handle sporadic and outbreak-associated vector borne diseases. In many state and local health departments, the ability to handle vector borne diseases has diminished. To remedy this, CDC has recently received an additional $5 million for state and local communities. This new funding will increase the ability of state and local health departments to detect WNV activity and expand CDC's ability to meet increasing requests for technical assistance and training. In addition, the funding will expand the ability to perform reference laboratory work; and collect, analyze, and rapidly disseminate information and data.

DELIVERY OF HEALTH SERVICES TO ADOLESCENTS

Adolescents are vulnerable to problems that can prevent their healthy physical, emotional, and intellectual development to adulthood. These problems include sexually risky behaviors, unintended pregnancy, substance abuse, and violence. The literature indicates that adolescents lack access to the type of care they need because they are uninsured, need parental consent, are uninformed about the types of care available to them, and are concerned about confidentiality. Research indicates that successful services delivered to adolescents must be comprehensive, interdisciplinary, culturally competent, and accessible. The Maternal and Child Health Bureau funds and gives technical assistance to states and communities to educate adolescent health experts in implementing innovative programs to address these issues.

GENETIC RESEARCH IN SCHIZOPHRENIA

Family, twin, and adoption studies have provided overwhelming but indirect evidence in support of a genetic etiology for schizophrenia. The literature indicates that recent studies exploring genetic markers provide a more direct approach to the identification of genes. Efforts to identify schizophrenia susceptibility genes include association studies, linkage analysis, studies of genetic anticipation, and the search for chromosomal abnormalities. Research indicates that schizophrenia susceptibility genes may be found in regions of chromosomes 22q, 8p, 6p, 13q, and 10p. NIMH is currently funding several studies on the genetic etiology of schizophrenia.

MENOPAUSE

Menopause is defined as the transition period in a woman's life when the ovaries stop producing eggs, menstrual activity decreases and eventually ceases, and the body decreases the production of the female hormones, estrogen and progesterone. The literature indicates that the average woman begins experiencing menopausal symptoms two to ten years before menstrual periods end. Some of the symptoms related to menopause are hot flashes and skin flush, mood changes, decreased libido, irregular menstrual periods, and vaginal dryness. Research indicates that the median age of menopause is 51, but can occur as late as 60. NCHS has data on menopause in their NHANES I and NHANES III survey.

QUALITY OF CARE MEASURES BASED ON SOCIOECONOMIC OR RACIAL/ETHNIC FACTORS

Quality of care refers to the degree in which health services increase the likelihood of desired health outcomes and are consistent with current professional knowledge. The literature indicates that assessments of quality of care do not study disparities related to socioeconomic status (SES), race or ethnicity. Research indicates that stratifying performance measures within existing quality measures by SES and race/ethnicity would help integrate health care disparities into mainstream quality assurance. In addition, linking reimbursement to SES and racial/ethnic composition would also aid in measuring disparities in health care. AHRQ has recently funded a study addressing SES and racial/ethnic health care disparities.

RACIAL/ETHNIC MINORITY SUBSTANCE ABUSE

Many racial/ethnic minorities have a greater prevalence of substance abuse compared to individuals in the total U.S. population. The literature indicates that substance abuse is generally higher in urban areas than in suburban or rural areas. Since Blacks and Hispanics are concentrated in central cities, they have a higher prevalence of substance abuse than other Americans. Research indicates that high levels of poverty and illiteracy also increase vulnerability to substance abuse. SAMHSA is currently providing funding to help improve local access for substance addiction treatment to racial/ethnic minorities.
